WIFE OF ORLANDO NIGHT-CLUB GUNMAN ARRESTED

In a move that has shocked the gay community, authorities have arrested the wife of the gunman who killed 49 people at an Orlando gay nightclub last year, the U.S. attorney general said on Monday. The arrest of Noor Salman came seven months after her husband Omar Mateen went on the rampage and was killed by police while holed up in the Florida club. Salman was arrested at her home outside San Francisco, the New York Times reported, citing an unnamed law enforcement official. She faces federal charges of obstruction of justice, and aiding and abetting the attempted provision of material support to a foreign terrorist organization, ABC News reported, citing the FBI and her lawyer. REUTERS

CHINA WILL ACT IF TRUMP CONTINUES ON TAIWAN

2 China will "take off the gloves" and take strong action if Donald Trump continues to provoke Beijing over Taiwan once he assumes office, two leading state-run newspapers said. In an interview with The Wall Street Journal published on Friday, Trump said the "One China" policy was up for negotiation. China's foreign ministry, in response, said "One China" was the foundation of China-U.S. ties and was non-negotiable. Trump broke with decades of precedent last month by taking a congratulatory telephone call from Taiwan President Tsai Ing-wen, angering Beijing which sees Taiwan as part of China. "If Trump is determined to use this gambit in taking office, a period of fierce, damaging interactions will be unavoidable, as Beijing will have no choice but to take off the gloves," the English-language China Daily said. REUTERS

LAST PERSON TO WALK ON THE MOON DIES AT 82

4 Former U.S. astronaut Eugene Cernan, who became the last astronaut to walk on the moon in an experience that he said made him one with the universe, died on Monday at 82, the U.S. space agency said. Cernan, who also was one of the first men to go on a spacewalk, died surrounded by his family, the National Aeronautics and Space Administration said in a statement without giving details. Cernan and fellow Apollo 17 astronaut Harrison Schmitt became members of the most exclusive club in the universe on Dec. 11, 1972, when they stepped from their lunar landing module onto the moon's surface. Only 10 other people — all American astronauts — had done so before and none since. REUTERS

Somerville's circus studios offer flying lessons

Studios see interest soar.

ERIN TIERNAN
@ErinTiernan
erin.tiernan@metro.us

Just because Ringling Bros. Circus is shutting down doesn't mean your circus dreams are dashed. Somerville is home to a thriving circus community, and you (yes you!) can join.

Just outside of Union Square, you'll find two aerial studios serving more than 1,000 students in the greater Boston area, and offering all regular joe's a chance to fly.

Look up when you're at either Esh Circus Arts or Aircraft Aerial Arts and you'll find rigging points dotting the ceiling. From them hang ropes, hoops, trapezes and silks. And on those, aerial students flip, spin, drop and tumble.

Both studios opened in 2010 with a single instructor and just a handful of students. Ellen Waylonis, co-owner of Esh, says the popularity of circus as a mainstream fitness activity has helped her business see massive expansion.

"You get to come over here and be a superhero once a week. I don't know how that can't make you feel pretty awesome," Waylonis said.

Esh now has about 700 students and boasts dozens of aerial classes and ground classes — think juggling, contortion, hand balancing and Cyr wheel.

Both Aircraft and Esh meet students where they are with beginner classes and help them level-up as their skills and strength develop.

We've all seen the majestic photos of bendy aerialists from Cirque du Soleil suspended in the air as fabric unravels and flows around them.

My experience with circus arts proved slightly less majestic, but still really fun.

First of all, to get the flowing fabric effect, you first need to climb up the silks. This is not as simple as it sounds.

In my first attempt

This is what an advanced aerials class looks like at Aircraft Aerial Arts, a circus training studio in Somerville. DEREK HODGKINS

at aerial silks, under the watchful eye of coach Marci Diamond at Aircraft Aerial Arts, I realized pretty quickly this probably wasn't going to happen.

Students' progress at different rates depending on their fitness level, Aircraft Aerial Arts owner Jill Maio said.

Mackenzie Clark of Somerville, who has been training at Aircraft for a year, is proof of this. She said she didn't have a problem climbing the silks her first time in the studio.

"I'm not very flexible, but I'm a rock climber, so I could climb," she said.

It took a couple of months of weekly training, but I finally reached the top of the silks.

My only regret was that there wasn't a bell to ring when I got there.

Over time students build up strength. Progress isn't quick, but it happens and eventually you get to climb higher and try fancier tricks.

Esh offers a professional prep program for students like Kylie Webb, a pro circus performer with the Somerville-based Boston Circus Guild who has performed at places like Burning Man and the Lawn on D.

We caught the 23-year-old at Esh last Thursday practicing a routine on a Cyr wheel — a large steel ring with a 6-foot diameter that she spins around in. She's been training for four years and it's a journey that's given her self-belief and strength, she said.

"I have gained confidence and I surprise myself constantly," she said.

Despite how it might look, Jill Maio, owner of Aircraft Aerial Arts, said circus arts are accessible and possible for most people — with a little training of course.

Esh and Aircraft both serve students ranging from toddler age into their 70s.

"If you can hold a plank, you're ready to try circus," she said.

And she's right.

Boston police privacy policy 'needs work,' ACLU says

City scraps plan to spend $1.4 million on Twitter, Facebook monitoring software.

program at the end of October.

A petition opposing the program garnered 3,000 signatures. Evan Greer, campaign director for Fight for the Future, said in a statement.

"This is a huge victory and offers a glimmer of hope for our basic rights at a time when it is in short supply," she said of the police department's decision to back off the program. "Mass surveillance programs like the one the Boston police intended to launch don't actually make us safer, but they have a profoundly chilling effect on free-program. The ACLU intends to remain active in the committee hearings ahead, she said.

But she said she has concerns with how Boston police treat citizens' privacy that extend beyond the debate on the social media-monitoring program.

"I'm eager to have a conversation that goes beyond individual technologies and looks at Boston Police Department privacy policies more generally, particularly policies governing how they collect data at the Boston Regional Intelligence Center. The poli-

Evan Greer

Amid privacy concerns and a backlash from civil rights proponents, the Boston Police Department is scrapping a $1.4 million plan to monitor and collect data off of social media platforms like Twitter and Facebook — at least for now.

City and police officials plan to re-draft a proposal for analytic software after gaining a better understanding of the public's privacy concerns.

"Our plan from the beginning was to use this process to learn and examine the capabilities of the technology and use that information to make informed decisions," police Commissioner Bill Evans said in a statement Friday night. "Moving forward, we will continue the process of inspecting what is available and ensuring that it meets the needs of the department while protecting the privacy of the public."

The department has been facing pushback from citizens and civil rights groups since it began soliciting bids for the analytic technology dom of speech and our basic civil rights."

The city Committee on Public Safety and Criminal Justice plans to hold a series of public hearings for more feedback on privacy concerns and to better inform the public about social media monitoring and its use in policing, said City Councilwoman Andrea Campbell, who chairs the committee.

ACLU Massachusetts' Director of Technology Kade Crockford said she was glad city leaders listened to residents and put the brakes on the cies need work," she said.

Officers at the city's regional intelligence center engage in what Crockford calls "suspicionless surveillance," where citizens do not need to be accused or suspected of a crime in order for police to collect and share information on them.

"I hope the outcry against this Boston Police Department attempt at invasion of privacy opens the door to larger conversation of the role of government to respect the balance of power in terms of privacy in the 21st century," she said.

Boston honors MLK with full day of events

From the nation's longest-running MLK memorial breakfast to free entry at the MFA, here's how Boston honored King.

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT
@kristindakota

Martin Luther King Jr. was honored across the country on Monday, and in Boston, the celebrations were out in full force.

The holiday started with the nation's longest-running memorial breakfast, held at the Boston Convention and Exhibition Center. This year marked the 47th iteration of the event, which was sponsored by Union United Methodist Church and St. Cyprian's Episcopal Church.

Along with religious leaders, commonwealth politicians and community leaders attended the breakfast. Boston Mayor Marty Walsh, Massachusetts Gov. Charlie Baker, Attorney General Maura Healey, and U.S. Sens. Elizabeth Warren and Ed Markey spoke at the event.

Boston's Museum of Fine Arts honored King's legacy on Monday with a free open house, along with music, guided tours and comments from Walsh.

"Art brings us together and helps us understand each other," Walsh said at the MFA.

As well as free admission, the MFA offered free programs throughout the day, like showcasing student artwork that honored King and the construction of a "one-of-a-kind mural based on themes of social justice, equality and unity by teens from Artists for Humanity," according to the museum.

All visitors were invited to participate in the mural — Walsh and current City Councilor and mayoral candidate Tito Jackson both helped with its completion.

"Art brings us together and helps us understand each other."

Boston Mayor Marty Walsh

From there, Walsh went over to Faneuil Hall to continue the celebrations with an annual MLK oration. The Boston

Youth Symphony Orchestra performed there to help honor the "life, legacy and influence of MLK," as Walsh, and performed "We Shall Overcome."

HOUSE PARTY STABBING

Man stabbed at chancellor's home said to be 'family friend'

A 20-year-old man stabbed early Sunday during a party at the home of the University of Massachusetts Boston chancellor has been identified as a "family friend," authorities said.

The victim, Fabrice Emile, was "recovering and in good spirits," Chancellor J. Keith Motley said Monday in a statement. Motley, who was traveling and not at home at the time of the party, called Emile "a family friend," and said he had spoken with the man's parents that morning.

Stoughton Police continue to investigate and no arrests have been made. Motley's three children (two daughters and a son) were at home when police received the call about a stabbing, according to the Boston Herald.

"I am not passing any blame yet with my children," Motley said, according to the Herald. "My children are very responsible. They have served this community. They are honor students. They have been exposed to a lot of things. I wasn't here, and so we are getting to the bottom of it."

Police were called to the Palisades Circle home around 3 a.m. Sunday and found that Motley had been stabbed. He was taken to a Boston hospital and released on Monday.

"Since returning to my home early this morning, I have had the opportunity to talk with my family and our friend, Fabrice Emile, and his family," Motley said in a statement. "As a parent, it is extremely disconcerting to be out of the country and learn that there has been an emergency situation at your home. In trying to get back here as soon as possible, I have been most concerned about my family and the health and well-being of Fabrice."

Stoughton Police continue to investigate the incident and ask anyone who attended the party or has any information to call the Detective Unit at 781-344-2575.

Is Ariana Grande engaged?

They were “side by side” in the steamiest music video of 2016, but are Ariana Grande and boyfriend Mac Miller ready to make it official?

Grande, 23, and Miller, 24, have only been dating (Instagram officially, anyway) since early September, but some new snaps on her Instagram have sparked engagement rumors. On Sunday, the “Into You” singer posed in a black leotard, fishnet stockings and high heels — and a diamond sparkler on her left ring finger.

Given that Grande

often uses her Instagram to share big news with her fans rather than the usual gossip channels, this could be legit. And the pair fairly set the internet on fire last year with their video for their duet, “My Favorite Part,” which Miller has said was inspired by her.

Grande is about to set off on her “Dangerous Woman” tour, too, and a promise like that would go a long way to help them cope with being apart. They may be young, but when it's right, it's right.

Suki Waterhouse and Diego Luna might be dating

Seems that former Bradley Cooper flame Suki Waterhouse has had enough of “silver linings” and is all about “The Force” these days. TMZ posted photos of the 25-year-old canoodling in paradise with “Rogue One” star Diego Luna on a recent trip to Tulum, Mexico.

The 37-year-old actor and Suki recently co-starred in cannibal thriller “The Bad Batch” alongside Jim Carrey, Keanu Reeves, Jason Momoa and Giovanni Ribisi. No word on when the relationship kicked off or if they're even official, and the Tulum Instagram posts from the Brit “it girl” model are currently Diego-free. But thanks to those privacy-violating paps — you can't say, “Pics or it didn't happen.”

the word

Kourtney Kardashian and Justin Bieber might be dating, too

New year, new (rumored) couple: Kourtney Kardashian and Justin Bieber, who spent a night out in West Hollywood over the weekend. The “KUWTK” reality star and “Sorry” singer — who were first rumored to be romantically involved back in 2015 — were spotted together at The Peppermint Club and then later the same evening at Delilah.

Kourtney wore a see-through black lace bra, while Justin kept it casual in a gray sweatshirt and denim hat. Honestly, ew to both of those looks, but at least Kourt has an excuse: She was coming from (Jessica Alba's hubby) Cash Warren's birthday party. “Pajama jammy jam.”

Meanwhile, Justin is allegedly talking smack about his ex, Selena Gomez, hooking up with The Weeknd. Sources tell TMZ he claims she's “using” the “Party Monster” singer to promote an upcoming collab — and that she did the same thing back with Zedd and himself before duets dropped.

Speaking of suspect musically inclined relationships, we hear J-Lo and Drake are on the rocks ...

How not to break your resolution for love

Single and Sweeping

LAURIE DAVIS

One of the most popular New Year's resolutions is to make a romantic connection with someone.

Often resolutions are executed with force. There are goals set and metrics to be met. But when it comes to love, that doesn't work. You're not trying to lose weight — you're looking for a partner. This resolution is unlike the others.

Here's how to approach finding love in the new year.

Don't set a deadline

One of the ways that

Don't give up on love or your resolution before the year is over. PIXABAY people use “force” is by setting a timeline. It could be a goal you say out loud, or perhaps something you've just daydreamed about like, “I want to meet someone by my birthday.” But either way, the timeline is set. What happens is the closer you get to the deadline, the more anxious you feel. And when you're anxious about love, your behaviors change and it curbs your potential. For example, you may get clingier or try to speed up the pace of a relationship — leaving your date more likely to bail. Remember that love can't be scheduled. The only thing in your control are the actions you take and connections you create.

Create consistency

After helping hundreds of people find love, the one thing I've found that will help you meet the right person is consistency in your actions. For example: Message 10 new people a week, or swipe for 15 minutes per day. Often, we are so passionate about our resolution that we burn out on it in one or two months. So make it sustainable — something you won't have to give up on part way through the year if you haven't met someone yet. Consistency in your actions creates consistency in your dates. And all of that energy turns into momentum toward meeting the one.

Revisit your “why”

Many resolutions lose steam when we lose touch with why it was important to us in January. So ask yourself now: Why is this something you chose? Check-in with yourself throughout the year so you don't end up setting this same intention come 2018.

Secrets, surprises and Shakespeare

"Something Rotten!" brings musical Easter eggs to the Boston Opera House this week.

RACHEL RACZKA
@rachelraczka
rachel.raczka@metro.us

If forms of entertainment about the entertainment industry have taught us anything, it's that it's always been really (really) hard to make it in the entertainment industry. The stakes are absurdly high, the rewards are few if any and the competition is fierce — especially if the competition is Shakespeare.

"Something Rotten!" cheekily explores a faux scenario in which aspiring playwright brothers Nigel and Nick Bottom are faced with a horrifying task: going head-to-head with William Shakespeare. Following Broadway acclaim (and several Tony noms and a win), John O'Farrell and Karey Kirkpatrick's musical comedy will kick off its national tour in the Hub on Jan. 17 for a run at the Boston Opera House through Jan. 29. We chat with Rob McClure, who stars as Nick — both on the upcoming tour and on Broadway.

Method in the madness

While Nick Bottom finds himself in the sticky business of competing with a very smug and financially secure Shakespeare to pen the next great masterpiece — he finds himself competing with the fictional version of the icon to woo producers for cash, as well. And along the way, he makes some ... questionable choices. But don't worry, they're still funny ones.

"His ego drives him beyond where he should go," McClure admits.

"But he puts his faith in a lot of half-truths that lead him down the wrong path. I think at the core, it's his need to provide for his family that drives him to a path of desperation. He's not quite in the right place, but with "Something Rotten!" it's done with a lot of tongue-in-cheek."

Easter eggs

Musical fans should prepare to freak out because "Something Rotten!" is packed with hidden snippets of iconic scores and shows — references, chords, etc. — just waiting to be discovered.

"Truly, I'm still hearing new ones all the time," admits McClure. "I've been doing the show for eight months and suddenly I'll hear a bar of music between two sung phrases and it's like, 'Oh my God, that's 'Sunday in the Park with George.' It's genius at that level. If you have a base knowledge of musical theater, there are tons of jokes. But if you're a diehard, it's endless."

McClure says the Broadway cast keeps tabs on the references on two "big orange poster boards" backstage. Each time they hear a new reference, they run back and jot it down. "We've got over 50 right now," he adds. "And that's just within the song 'Musical,' not even the whole show."

That time Jim Jarmusch almost died

The legendary filmmaker talks about his new film, "Paterson," and being poisoned by mushrooms.

MATT PRIGGE
@mattprigge
matt.prigge@metro.us

Since his first film, 1980's "Permanent Vacation," through "Stranger Than Paradise," "Ghost Dog" and "Only Lovers Left Alive," Jim Jarmusch has done Jim Jarmusch. He's never been the type of indie filmmaker working toward studio work or comic book movies. This year we've received two Jarmusch films: "Gimme Danger," his doc about The Stooges, was released last fall. And now there's "Paterson," in which Adam Driver plays a bus driver and poet (also named Paterson). We see a week in his life, each day more or less like the last and the next. It's a very calming film, especially when seen now. Just don't think of it as trendy.

This is a very calming, therapeutic film to watch right now, with everything's that going on in the world. But I don't want to cheapen it or make it sound like you're ever responding to trends.

Well, hopefully not. People read too many things in my films sometimes. Like in "Paterson." They say, "Well, he doesn't have a cellphone. Are you against digital technology?" Well, no, the character doesn't have a cellphone because he chooses not to. His wife [Laura, played by Golshifteh Farahani] has a laptop and an iPad. It's not a self-portrait.

So many of your films incorporate different art forms: poetry, books, music, paintings. I sometimes worry that today's film fanatics only know about film.

I'm a self-proclaimed dilettante. There are too many interesting things in the world. I can't just learn about one. I read books and I listen to music and I'm an amateur mycologist, which is the study of mushroom identification.

I have a lot of interests. I just get excited for all the things I don't know. To regulate myself to only movies would be like, "Why?" [Laughs]

Wait, how did you get into mycology? Some 20 years ago I ate in a nice Italian restaurant in New York. I went home and I felt fine. Three hours later, all my internal organs were starting to shut down. I was rushed to an emergency room. My stomach was pumped and I was given IVs. The next day I was told, "If you had gotten here an hour later you wouldn't have gotten here at all. You would have been gone." They asked me, "What toxic substance have you been near, because you've been badly poisoned."

And it turned out I had some kind of pasta with mushrooms, and something got slipped in there. I had wild mushrooms. And I said, "Wow, that's heavy, I almost died." Then I just started reading a lot about mushrooms, and how incredible they are, and how they aren't plants or animals. In fact, their DNA is closer to animals. I could go on and on. It's one of the things I'm interested in.

Chris Messina gained a lot of weight to play Dion, the tommygun-wielding right-hand man of Ben Affleck's gangster in "Live by Night," now in theaters. WARNER BROS. PICTURES

Chris Messina bulks up

The actor talks about what it was like to gain 40 pounds for "Live by Night."

MATT PRIGGE
@mattprigge
matt.prigge@metro.us

In Ben Affleck's "Live by Night," Chris Messina gets to do something he's never done before: Play a cackling, trigger-happy gangster. Messina's Dion is the right-hand man of Affleck's Joe Coughlin, a WWI veteran-turned-bootlegger who finds himself creating a rum empire in 1920s Tampa. Messina knows you usually see him as a decent guy, whether in "Argo," "Julie & Julia" or on "The Mindy Project." That's why he was so stoked to get a Tommy gun — and gain some 40 pounds for the role.

You wouldn't think from the roles you've played that you were hoping to be Cagney or De Niro. Most of my career I've been cast as a nice guy. It was nice that a director had some creativity and said, "You know, there are other sides to this actor."

You've played a couple unlikable or sometimes mean characters before. But I'm always mean in a white-collar, Republican way, at least in the bigger movies. But this is a big one. I get a Tommy gun, you know?

You also gained 40 pounds for the role.

The character in the book is described as "round." He's a big guy. I thought I should be heavy next to Ben Affleck, who's really tall and wide-shouldered. I couldn't make myself taller. So I gained weight. I went to a camera test and he saw that I gained weight. He loved it. I wanted to make him happy, so I went further. At the end of the film I was 202 pounds. As a wrap gift he paid for a trainer to help me lose it.

Put side by side, you two almost look like Laurel and Hardy.

That's what I was thinking. I was also looking at Capone and that look. It goes with the idea that those gangsters thought, "I'm gonna eat what I want to eat, I'm gonna drink what I want to drink. I'm gonna smoke cigars, I'm gonna drive the cars, I'm gonna get the ladies." The only problem is we had a few additional shots after we wrapped, so I had to get a fat suit. When I was fat, it affected the way I walked. I carried my gait differently. I was out of breath a lot. All that stuff I loved. Then with the fat suit I just didn't feel like the character.

It sounds like it was fun to gain all that weight. It was four months of beers, pizza, pasta, ice cream and french fries. When I was at work I was respected, I was placed on a pedestal. And then when I was dropping off my kids at school, I was looked at like, "What happened?" [Laughs] I felt kind of gross at school; at work, I felt proud.

Did your body totally rebel against you afterwards? My stomach was shattered for months afterward. But you know, I'm a pretty skinny guy. My body just wants to be skinny. My body is like, "This is where we like you."

Putting athleisure to work

Philly stylist Alisa Frederico gives us tips on making the trend office-friendly.

JENNIFER LOGUE
jenniferlogue@metro.us

In case you haven't noticed, athleisure — casual items like yoga pants, sweatshirts and sneakers serving a purpose beyond getting a great workout — has taken over. But how do you dress up this trend for a fashion-forward look at work? Stylist Alisa Frederico, who runs the brand Dressing Jane, gives us tips on the do's and don'ts of incorporating athleisure into your professional wardrobe.

Find out the rules of your workplace

Every workplace is different, and you need to identify how strict your office dress code is. "If you work in a super-stuffy environment, this trend may not be possible," says Frederico. "If you work in a more open environment, you can get away with incorporating leggings and slouchy tees with a cute sneaker."

Leggings are not a replacement for trousers

Your leggings need to be of quality because if they're too thin, you might as well be wearing stockings. Frederico advises that for the office, dark solid colors are ideal. "Black, dark gray, burgundy. Don't wear wild workout pants in a professional environment," she says. "Also, make sure your bum is covered" with something like a long sweater or blazer.

Strike a balance between casual and structured

To make athleisure work for the office, it's important that you keep the look grounded by pairing it with something dressier. "I love doing a sweatshirt with a pencil skirt," says Frederico. "You can even put a blouse underneath a casual sweatshirt."

Accessories play a huge part

Think you're finished once you've layered your clothes? Think again. "You need great jewelry to look polished," Frederico says. "Make sure you have a killer necklace on and a pair of earrings." And if you're the kind of person who is constantly cold, wearing hats is another option. "Slouchy beanies and pom hats are a great way to add to the look," she adds.

Keep your footwear clean

Wearing your everyday gym sneakers to the office is a definite don't. "If you're going to do a trainer or a little sneaker, it should be clean and new — not the pair you just hiked 9 miles in," Frederico says. "I love the Adidas Gazelle. They come in a range of colors and add sleek comfort."

wellbeing

A beginner's guide to self-care

Find your chill in 2017; it's essential to your health and wellbeing. ISTOCK

Learn how to be good to yourself in 2017.

"Self-care" has been a buzzword in the wellness and lifestyle community for some time now, especially on social media, where the hashtag accompanies Goop-esque photos of scented candles, yoga poses and acai bowls. This depiction makes it easy to write it off as fluff — an indulgence for those who have privilege and too much time on their hands.

But in this moment of high anxiety, with the threat of political worst-case scenarios and the loss of affordable health-care becoming a reality, learning to take care of yourself has become essential.

So why does a concept that should be intuitive perplex so many of us?

"Most folks hear 'self-care' and think 'I can't afford to take a week off right now' or 'a bubble bath isn't going to solve my problems'," says Melissa Fabello, a body-acceptance activist and writer based in Philadelphia. But they're overthinking it. As she puts it, self-care is "simply making it a priority in your life to take care of your physical, mental and spiritual health."

There's your new year's resolution, handed to you. Now, how do you get started?

Find your happy place

The first step to practicing self-care is figuring out what makes you feel good, from how you spend your time, to the people you surround yourself with. And those things will be unique to you.

"If you know that a used bookstore on a Sunday morning sounds like heaven to you, make more time to go," says Fabello. "If you know that old friend Suzie brings negative energy into your day, don't answer her phone calls as often."

Develop a better response to stress

Learn to identify the signs of high anxiety and how to address them. If you notice your chest tightening up or your hands getting clammy, stop what you're doing and take a moment to ground yourself, says Fabello. And that doesn't mean leaving your desk to take a 45-minute yoga class.

"Do something small that resets you so you can come back to the task at hand in a state of mind that allows you to work through the [stress] instead of trying to force yourself through it to the point of tears," she suggests.

That could be as simple as remembering to breathe. "One of the best practices to take care of yourself and your body is to simply deepen your breath, pause, and feel it," says Joanna Andrae, a holistic-health coach and guided-meditation teacher. The best part is that it doesn't take long, and you can do it anywhere.

"Breathe deeply for three minutes on your commute," she suggests, or "take a few moments to feel the expansion and contraction of a deep breath in bed before going to sleep."

Make time for reflection

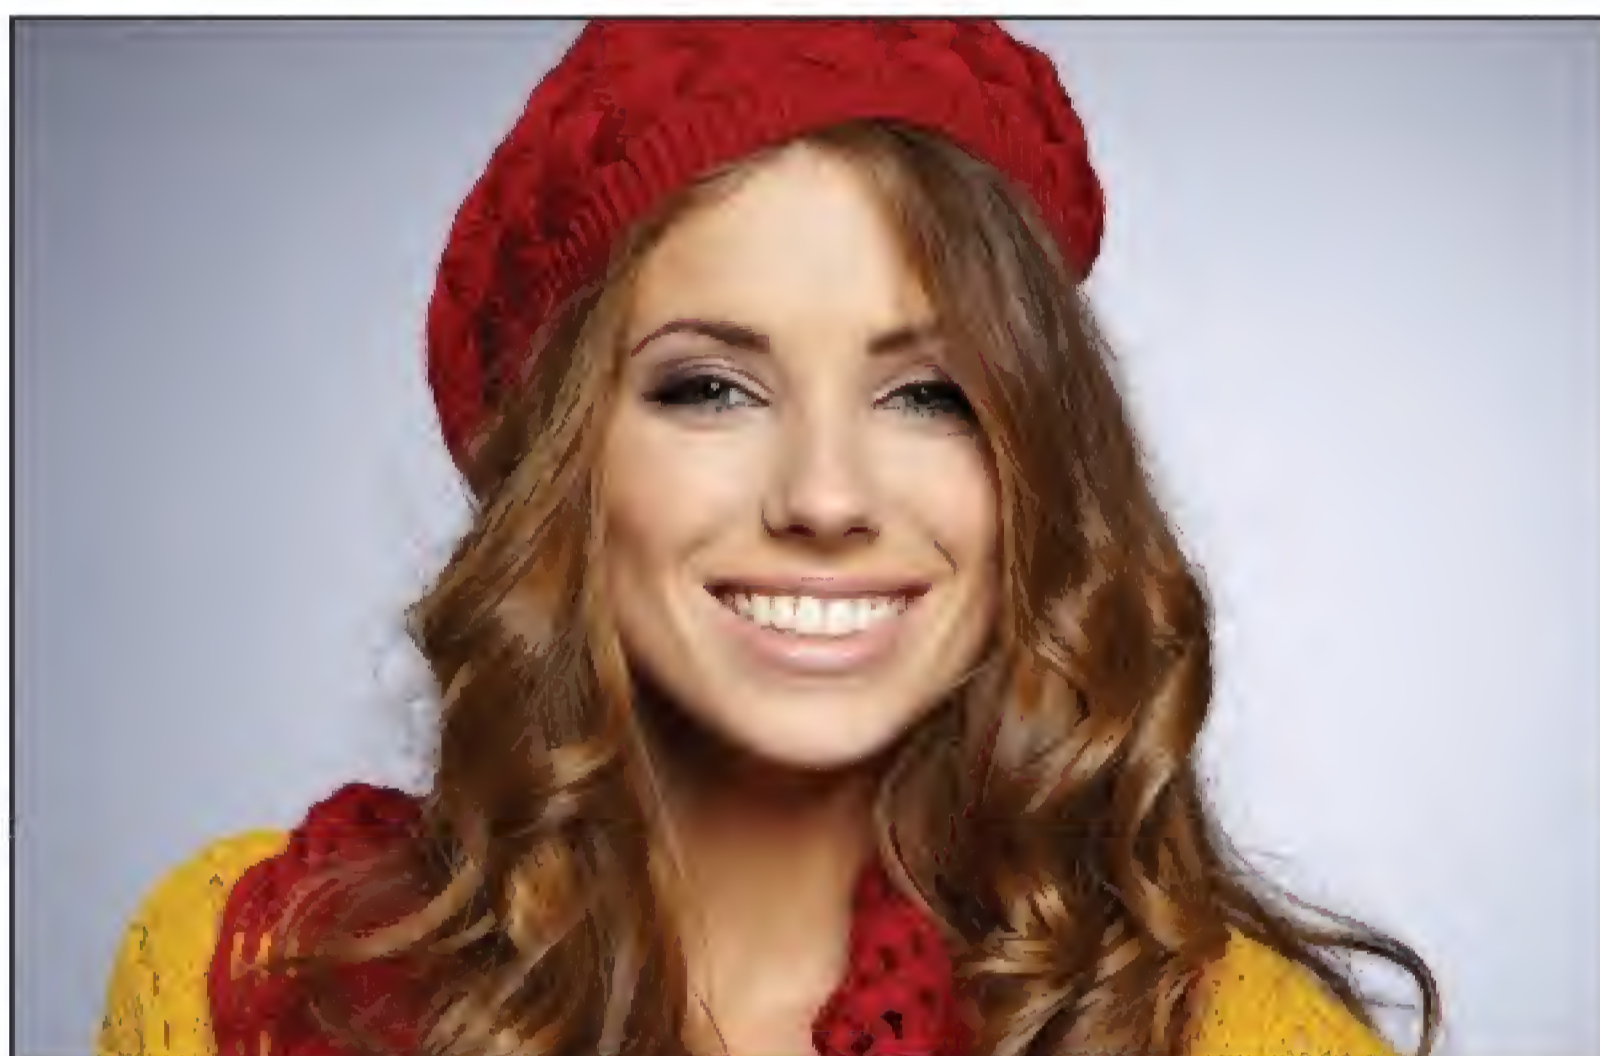

"I always recommend people journal in some capacity," says Andrae. If you never got into the habit, or the last time was when you were writing "Dear Diary" in grade school, Andrae suggests starting small with a gratitude journal. "Every AM (or PM) while brushing your teeth, jot down three things you're grateful for," she says. "Eventually, this practice shifts your mind-set to a much more positive place."

NASA-Approved LASIK - Our all-laser, bladeless LASIK at New England Eye Center has greatly improved results and helped take the fear out of having LASIK. The vast majority of our LASIK and PRK patients now achieve 20/20 vision at distance without glasses or contact lenses. Our method of LASIK is the same type approved for NASA astronauts and military pilots.

Implantable Contact Lens - New England Eye Center is among a select group of practices in the country offering patients the benefits of the Visian Implantable Collamer Lens (ICL). Unlike LASIK, the Visian corrects vision by inserting a delicate intraocular lens-like device atop the eye's natural lens, which is why the Visian is also referred to as the 'Implantable Contact Lens.' All of the refractive surgeons at New England Eye Center are qualified and experienced in performing this brief outpatient procedure to insert the Visian ICL. Because no corneal or other tissue is removed in the Visian ICL procedure, visual recovery is extremely rapid and the ICL can potentially be replaced if the eye's focus changes over time.

Refractive Lens Exchange - If you're frustrated with reading glasses and bifocals, our refractive specialists perform a procedure known as Refractive Lens Exchange. By replacing your eye's aging natural lens with a Intraocular Lens Implant customized specifically for your visual needs - and your lifestyle - allowing you to see better, look younger and never have to worry about developing cataracts!

Laser Cataract Surgery - For seniors experiencing changes in their vision - or who have been diagnosed with a cataract - New England Eye Center is turning the dream of Laser Cataract Surgery into reality. We are currently among only the top 3% of practices in the country to offer patients the added precision and accuracy of Laser Cataract Surgery using OptiMedica® Catalys™ Precision Laser System.

This year, take your vision to the NEXT LEVEL by giving yourself or a loved one the Gift of Sight. Now that's a Gift that keeps on Giving. A blessed New Year from the surgeons and staff of New England Eye Center.

With the consistent invocation that STEM careers hold the key to our nation's future, the liberal arts degree has become branded as a useless and overpriced luxury—one that leaves students ill prepared to enter the workforce.

Republicans like Kentucky Gov. Matt Bevin have gone so far as to suggest the defunding of liberal-arts majors. Instead, the trend is that students be trained solely in the more elite and promising fields that make up the core of STEM: science, technology, engineering and mathematics.

And while the idea might be gaining momentum among the political elite, it's entirely unfounded, explains Lynn Pasquerella, president of the Association for American Colleges and Universities.

"It's the false narrative that's created around English majors working at Starbucks or flipping burgers that we have to get rid of," she explains.

In fact, the core skills liberal-arts students acquire have never been more relevant to the job market.

A 2015 study by Burning Glass Technologies analyzed 25 million online job postings and found the highest demand by employers across all fields was for skills like writing, research, analysis critical thinking and creativity — essentially, the core tenets of liberal arts. Even for information technology jobs, a field most representative of STEM, communication and writing were the most sought-after soft skills.

In fact, a liberal-arts background is not only presently in demand — it represents a broad and portable skill set for the future, says Eric Jensen, director of the Frank Aydelotte Foundation for the Advancement of the Liberal arts.

"We know that people don't stay with the same job for as long as they used to," he explains. "And so having these strong skills that aren't tied to one specific job definitely serves people well."

Plus, with automation only increasing, so many of the jobs that we're training the next generation for will be replaceable by technology, says Pasquerella.

But while computers might surpass humans in speed and accuracy, they'll never be able to mirror their creative, innovative and social skills.

"We need a workforce that is going to be able to deal with a world's unscripted problems and not just come up with solutions to problems which we already have the answers," says Pasquerella. "So how do we anticipate the needs of the future — those unscripted problems — and prepare students for that? It's only through a liberal arts education."

How to build a personal brand

Tips for standing out in today's extremely competitive marketplace

SARA FEINSTEIN
letters@metro.us

In today's increasingly competitive digital climate, building a personal brand — essentially, a professional reputation — has become more important than ever.

"We're now competing for jobs with people who live halfway around the world because the work environment allows us to be virtual," says William Arruda, a personal-branding consultant and the founder of Reach Personal Branding.

If you want to advance your career, he explains, you really need to define and communicate your "unique promise of value."

Define your brand

In today's digital age, having a personal brand is vital. iStock

Much of the initial process of discovering your brand comes from cultivating information from those around you, says Arruda. He says a good way to begin is by asking people questions like, "What three words would you use to describe me?" or "What do you think is my greatest strength?" and looking for common themes that emerge.

Introductions can also help to clarify your specific brand attributes, he explains. Someone might say, "This is the most creative person we have on our team" or "This is the most buttoned-up person we've ever worked with — she's on top of every detail." In the end, defining your brand can be boiled down to recognizing what is authentic to you, what differentiates you from everyone else who does what you do.

Tell your story

Whether you're building a website or crafting your LinkedIn bio, you must be able to tell your story in a way that captivates people and makes them interested in you, says Arruda. This means elaborating not only on what you've done but who you are. "You want to focus on your strengths and be able to provide examples of what they are and why they make you so great," he says.

You also need to have a distinct point of view. "It's not good enough to say you're really good at customer service," says Arruda. "What's your point of view around customer service? Is it that the customer is always right?" While you're bound to have people who connect with you, there will also be people who might not. "That's one of the scary things about personal branding — it's not about pleasing all of the people; it's about taking a stand and connecting with those people for whom that resonates."

Target your audience

"Personal branding is not about being famous, it's about being selectively famous," says Arruda. "You need to make sure that the people who need to know you, know you, and that you're always visible to them." If your target audience frequently uses LinkedIn, or they prefer Twitter or Facebook, then build your profile and your visibility on those sites, he says. That goes for the real world, too. Ask yourself, "What conferences do they go to? What associations do they belong to?" Then actively integrate yourself into their world.

Evolve as you go

Throughout the process, it's important to take a step back and ask yourself if what you're doing is actually working and bringing you closer to your ultimate goal, says Arruda.

In the end, a strong personal brand is constantly evolving, so it's important to keep tweaking as you go.

NO MORE CUPCAKE QBs FOR THE PATRIOTS' DEFENSE

Matt Burke is the National Sports Editor and a columnist at Metro US.

Follow him on Twitter @burke_metro

Statistically and remarkably, the Patriots have not faced a top-10 quarterback this season. That will change in a hurry. One could easily make the case that the four quarterbacks remaining in the NFL playoffs are, not coincidentally, the four best QBs in football.

Matt Ryan and Tom Brady were the top-two QBs in terms of passer rating this season. Aaron Rodgers is simply playing better than any QB in pro football history right now, and Ben Roethlisberger has had nine multiple touchdown throwing games this season.

So, we're about to find out whether or not this Patriots defense is the fraud unit that some people believe them to be.

For the record, I think they're a slightly above-average bunch in today's NFL. In other words, if Roethlisberger is "held" to a 300-yard, two touchdown passing day this Sunday, I'll consider that a win for the Patriots.

Now, the Patriots' defense can only play the schedule in front of them, and it seems like we're in a down cycle in terms of truly elite QBs, so we can't hammer them too hard because of lack of competition this season. But we absolutely can be healthy skeptical about a unit that consistently makes Ryan Fitzpatrick look like Dan Marino.

Dont'a Hightower applies pressure to Steelers quarterback Ben Roethlisberger in September of 2015. GETTY IMAGES

Here is a list of the QBs the Patriots have beaten this season: Carson Palmer, Ryan Tannehill, Brock Osweiler, Charlie Whitehurst, Andy Dalton, Landry Jones, Tyrod Taylor, Colin Kaepernick, Fitzpatrick, Jared Goff, Joe Flacco, Trevor Siemian and Matt Moore. Now that is one giant sea of crap.

Flacco is the only one out of that group that you could make the case for when it comes to being an elite talent (and that's a bit of a stretch). In a big Monday night game against the Pats a month ago, Flacco set a Ravens franchise record for completions with 37. He finished the night with a decent 92.1

passer rating with two touchdowns and a pick.

In the Patriots' only real loss this season (I'm not counting that odd Brady-less Buffalo game in Week 4) they fell to a QB who is often elite. Russell Wilson came into Foxboro in mid-November and hung 31 points on the Pats, shredding their "D" to the tune of 348 passing yards with three touchdowns and zero interceptions. He finished the night with a highly impressive 124.6 passer rating — statistically his third best game of the 2016 season.

So, the sample size of the Patriots vs. top-of-the-line QBs this season is microscopic — but the data is worrisome nonetheless. Despite an ugly performance against the Steelers coach with sharp words for Pats

It was always suspected that the Steelers hate the Patriots, but now we have concrete proof.

After the Steelers beat the Chiefs, 18-16, Sunday night to earn a date with the Patriots in the AFC title game this coming Sunday, Pittsburgh wide receiver Antonio Brown posted a Facebook Live video that included Steelers head coach Mike Tomlin cussing out the Pats.

"When you get to this point in the journey, man, not a lot needs to be said. Let's say very little moving forward," Tomlin told his team. "Let's start our preparations. We just spotted these a--holes a day and half. [The Patriots] played yesterday. Our game got moved to tonight. We're going to touch down at 4 o'clock in the f---ing morning. So be it. We'll be ready for their a--. But you ain't got to tell them we're coming."

Chiefs on Sunday night (20-of-31 for 224 yards, zero TDs, one INT, 72.5 passer rating), it's easy to imagine the 34-year-old Roethlisberger bouncing back against the Pats with a monster passing day. The last time "Big Ben" faced the Pats was opening night of last season, and he hit on 26-of-38 passes for 351 yards, a TD and a pick. He finished with a strong 95.4 passer rating while completing nine of his passes to Antonio Brown for 133 yards. The Pats won the game, 28-21, but Roethlisberger made it clear that he can put his team in position to win at Gillette Stadium.

Bill Belichick defenses are famous for taking away the opposing team's strength. Right now, the Steelers' strength actually does not lie in its passing game, as running Le'Veon Bell is averaging an absurd 146.5 rushing yards per game since mid-November. So, as crazy as it might seem — the Patriots might say to themselves, "Let's take away Bell, and see if Roethlisberger can beat us."

Unlike the majority of the rest of the QBs the Patriots have faced this season, Roethlisberger is up for those types of challenges.

"If Roethlisberger is 'held' to a 300-yard, two-touchdown passing day, I'll consider it a win for the Patriots."

'I'M RON BAKER???'

Sports has never been more entwined with entertainment, so if you're a sports franchise that's going nowhere in the standings — why not give the people what they want? Knicks reserve guard Ron Baker, who looks like a Von Erich brother from 1980s Texas pro wrestling, has become a fan favorite at MSG and a favorite in the Knicks' locker room. He even cracked the starting lineup Monday.

The former Wichita State guard seems like he has the green light to shoot whenever he wants now, so let's get a Lin-sanity style streak going with Ron — victories be damned. Carmelo Anthony seems to be on-board, as he deadpanned Ron's locker room nickname during a halftime interview Monday.

"[Ron] Burgundy came in, played great minutes as a starter today," Carmelo said.

DAD TO THE DEFENSE

Sixers center Jahlil Okafor will likely be traded at some point in 2017 due to the phenomenon that is Joel Embiid.

Okafor was the No. 3 overall pick in the draft just 19 months ago, but no one these days is excited to see him play. A 76ers blogger tweeted out

Saturday night, "Imagine taking a bus for two hours only to see Jahlil Okafor start." Okafor's dad, Chukwudi, was apparently doing searches for his son's name at the time, and quickly replied to the blogger via tweet: "Imagine me slapping the s— out of you."

ROGER THE DODGER

Avoiding awkwardness is a great life skill, but NFL commish Roger Goodell is getting way too good at it. Goodell, who used to be a regular at Gillette Stadium, hasn't returned to the scene of the non-crime of deflated footballs in two years. He was at the Georgia Dome this past weekend to watch Falcons-Seahawks as he always shows up at stadiums during the playoffs. The thing is, though, he never goes to the same stadium in back-to-back weeks. With the NFC title game in Atlanta, it would seem the circumstances are in place for the NFL boss to return to Foxboro this coming Sunday.

At this point, the guy should just own it and hand-deliver properly inflated footballs to the Patriots' sideline just before the game as Kelis' "Bossy" blares from the PA system.
